What External Workers Can and Cannot Do

What external workers can and cannot do at Helvia. Unless a row says otherwise, this applies to both tracks.

	Allowed?	Notes
Pay and benefits
Helvia benefits — health insurance, 401(k), paid leave	No	Their employer provides these. Point any question to the agency or, for contractors, to themselves
Discussing pay, rates or a raise with them	No	Their employer decides what they earn. Refer them on
Overtime	Yes, if agreed in advance	Contingent only, and it must be on the timesheet. See Overtime, Double Time and Comp Time
Time off in lieu of overtime pay	No	Never allowed. All hours are paid in the week worked
Performance
Giving feedback directly	Yes	Do it, and put the substance in the check-in form so the agency sees it too
Running a formal performance review	No	Their employer's job
Disciplining or dismissing	No	Tell HR; the agency handles the conversation
Ending an assignment	Yes, through HR	We end assignments; we do not terminate employment
Meetings and team life
Team meetings, stand-ups, project rituals	Yes	Anything about the work they are doing
Safety briefings for their site	Yes	Required, not optional
All-hands, company results, strategy sessions	No	Employee-only
Team lunches and social events	Yes	Unpaid if attendance is optional; paid if you require them to be there
Recognition
Saying thank you, publicly or privately	Yes	Freely
A team gift or voucher up to $75	Contingent only	Tell the agency. No cash, no gift cards
Bonuses or incentive schemes	No	These are pay, and pay is their employer's

Training
Training needed to do the job	Yes	See Eligibility — Training
Safety and compliance training	Yes	Required
Career development and general training	No	Their employer provides it
Working arrangements
Setting their day-to-day priorities	Contingent: yes. Contractor: no	For contractors we agree outcomes, not activity
Agreeing their working pattern	Contingent: yes	Tell the agency
Remote or flexible working	Yes, with approval	See the Flexible Work Policy
Working from outside the US	No	See Working From Outside the United States
Travel
Business travel required by the work	Yes	See Travel — Rules for External Workers
A Helvia credit card	No	They pay and claim through their employer

When in doubt, the question behind every row is: is this an employment decision, or a work decision? Work decisions are ours. Employment decisions are their employer's. Email hr@helvia.ai if a situation is not covered here.

Equipment, Access and Identification

Equipment. Give external workers what the job actually needs and nothing more.

	Contingent worker	Contractor
Laptop	Yes, issued by IT, where the work needs one	Normally their own; ours only where security requires it
Helvia account and email	Yes	Yes, usually a guest account
Desk and site access	Yes, if they work on site	Visitor badge, or a temporary card if regular
Phone	Only if the role genuinely needs one	No
Helvia business cards	No	No

Everything comes through IT, and everything comes back on the last day. Do not hand over spare equipment you happen to have — untracked kit is kit nobody recovers.

Access. Ask IT for the narrowest access that lets them do the job, and set an expiry date matching the assignment or SOW end date. Accounts that expire on their own are the single most effective control we have.

Never give access by sharing your own credentials. If someone needs something you have, that is a request to IT, not a password to pass on.

Identification. People inside and outside Helvia should be able to tell who is an employee and who is not.

- Email signature — name, role, then their agency or company, then "on assignment at Helvia". For example: Jane Doe, QA Engineer, [Agency Name] — on assignment at Helvia.
- Directory — BambooHR shows worker type and their employer automatically.
- Chat and collaboration tools — where the tool supports a guest or external label, use it.
- Customer-facing work — an external worker dealing with customers should not present as a Helvia employee. Agree the wording with HR before the engagement starts.

Safety equipment. Where a role needs protective equipment, we provide the basics on site — eye and ear protection. Anything personally fitted, such as safety footwear or prescription safety glasses, is the worker's own responsibility through their employer. If someone cannot meet the safety requirements for a task, stop the work and talk to HR. Never let it continue while it gets sorted out.

Health. External workers use their own employer's arrangements for health matters. In a medical emergency on our premises we do exactly what we would for anyone — first aid, emergency services, and tell HR.

Training

Training they should have: anything needed to do the work safely and properly.

- Safety training for their site or task — required before the work starts, no exceptions
- Security and data handling — required for anyone with access to our systems
- Tool and process training specific to how we work — our deployment process, our ticketing conventions, our house style
- Compliance training where the role requires it

Book this the way you would for anyone in the team. For contingent workers, tell the agency if the training takes significant time, because it is billable — the worker is being paid for those hours.

Training we do not provide: general professional development, certifications, conference attendance, management or leadership training, and anything aimed at the person's career rather than the work in front of them. That belongs to their employer, and offering it blurs the line — paying for someone's certification looks a lot like investing in an employee.

Team building. If the whole team is doing it and it is about how the team works together, external workers are included. If attendance is required, contingent workers are paid for the time.

Where an external worker asks for development support, be straightforward: explain that it comes from their own employer, and point them there. For a contingent worker the agency often does provide training, so this is a real answer rather than a brush-off.

Records. Safety and compliance training completion is recorded on the BambooHR record. HR checks it periodically, and an assignment where required training has not been done will be paused until it is.

Instructors. Where an external worker has the expertise to run a session for our team, that is fine and often valuable — but it should be within the scope of the assignment or SOW, not a favour. For contractors, if it is not in the SOW, revise the SOW.
